

LAST YEAR'S GRADUATES MAJORING IN RUSSIAN, EURASIAN, AND EAST EUROPEAN STUDIES

The data below, collected from a small group of U.S. universities in response to an announcement posted to SEELANGS and H-Russia Internet discussion groups, and sent directly to some schools, show the number of graduates majoring and minor in Russian, Eurasian, and East European fields who received their degrees during the last academic year (July 2000 through June 2001). PLEASE NOTE: The data included were provided by the departments and are accurate, but not all universities and departments that granted degrees to students majoring in Russian, Eurasian, and East European Studies were contacted, and from among those that were contacted, not all responded. As a result, data about some schools may be incomplete if information received was about only one group of students—only Ph.D., M.A., or B.A. recipients, or if information was submitted by only one department at the school. We received data about only a few departments in disciplines other than languages and literatures (e.g. history, economics, political science). The results of this survey should then be seen only as informal and showing general trends of enrollment in the field, and not as a complete and comprehensive survey of all universities granting degrees in Russian, Eurasian, and East European Studies.

If you are an administrator of a program that was not contacted, and would like to be included in next year's survey, please send a note to the Editor of NewsNet, Jolanta Davis, e-mail: newsnet@fas.harvard.edu, and ask to be put on the mailing list.
